

ABSTRACT

An integrated circuit and an antifraud method implementing at least one operation involving at least one secret quantity, and functionally including upstream and downstream of the operator at least one source register and at least one destination register, respectively, and including means for loading a random number at least in the destination register.